The Hand as It Ended

Final scores tell you who won. Now the table can show you how.

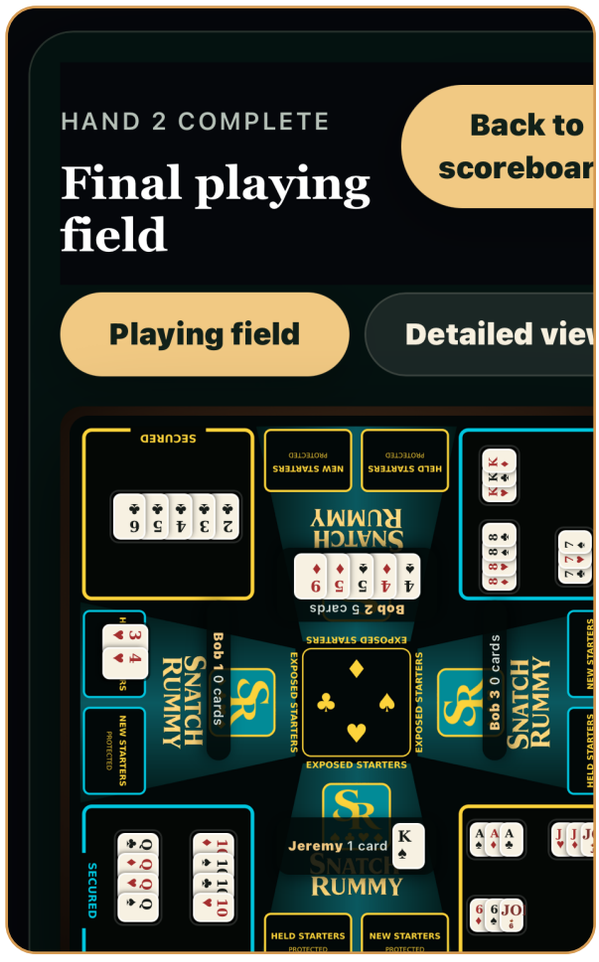
When a Snatch Rummy hand ends, See final table now opens with the completed hand arranged on the official Playing Field.

Secured combinations return to the corner of the player who completed or snatched them. Protected starters stay in their marked areas. Exposed starters remain in the center. Cards still in a player's hand stay beside that player.

The cards face the person who held, played, or secured them. A slight overlap and natural stagger brings the view closer to a real table without hiding what happened.

Prefer the score-by-score accounting? Detailed view remains one tap away. Both views use the same final hand: one shows its geography, and the other shows its bookkeeping.

The goal is not to make the app replace the table. It is to keep the online game connected to the physical one - where position, direction, and ownership tell the story before anyone totals the score.



The completed hand stays oriented to the players around the field. The original detailed review is still available.

Play the hand. Then see the table it left behind.
